The Regional Mall - Repositioning Capability

Fancher Partners LLC has assembled a consortium of best-in-class mall development, cinema, restaurant, department store veterans and support services professionals combined with development capability in regional retail, entertainment, outlet retail and ethnic themed venues. Mall Business LLC seeks opportunities to consult or co-develop with regional mall owners who understand the need to reposition their properties now in order to protect property value.

Rationale for Change. The next several years will be challenging times for the type B and C mall owner who does not have the leverage and capacity of a Westfield or Simon scale operator. It is becoming increasingly apparent that the shopping center industry has more "bricks & mortar" retail space than there is demand by quality retailers, and that average tenant space requirements are declining in size as the retailer chases efficiency. The traditional mall department store has experienced a major contraction in the number of viable operators resonating with the consumer, resulting in a much smaller menu of sustainable players to anchor malls today. A core group of national department store merchants combined with strong regional players that used to number as many as ten candidates for a regional mall now stands at less than five. JC Penny and/or Sears' days are numbered and their sales productivity, which is key to inline space leasing, is declining. Big box retailers historically housed in the power center that can operate optimally in the regional mall are few in number, Target and Costco as examples, and those boxes are often already positioned in the mall's sub-market. A mainstay, Barnes & Nobles, is not expanding to buttress the C mall, even if debt and equity would underwrite the lease. The cinema is already in most of the viable malls or positioned across the street or otherwise in the "film zone".

Commodity and specialty goods transactions are incrementally shifting from originating in the physical store to being fulfilled through the internet website of a conventional retailer or ecommerce Amazon type purveyor wooing the internet "window shopper" with seemingly low pricing and next day home/office delivery. Ecommerce fulfillment meeting shopper expectation turns to habit and shopping patterns change. Online transactions accounted for 6.2% of aggregate retail sales in 2013 and consensus is that the consumer will increase its internet election to 10% by 2017 or sooner. The bricks & mortar retailer working hand-in-hand with the mall landlord need to change how shopper transactions are "fulfilled" in the mall in order to counter transference of sales from the mall to the ecommerce retailer.

As department stores may go dark, or landlords proactively take back unproductive anchors, and/or in-line vacancy increases and NOI is challenged, the proactive mall owner needs to devise "contract and curate" strategies in order to maintain or build value. Today's four anchor,1.2 million square foot mall may need to downsize to two anchors in 600,000 square feet of retail buttressed by new land uses.
The Regional Mall - Repositioning Capability

Mall Operations. MB LLC is developing mall centric operational services, through affiliates, that include the installation of electric vehicle charging stations through a national charging station developer and originating wine, micro-beer & art festivals on a national basis as directed by EventWerks, Inc. of Dana Point, CA. MB LLC is organizing a package delivery system to facilitate same day delivery/pickup/returns for tenants, utilizing the mall’s website and on-site “concierge” services and, where appropriate, mall dead-space for immediate-access storage of goods to support the mall retailer’s own on-line origination business and reduce the retailer’s “back room” space requirements. The objective is to make the Mall become the “fulfillment center” for both in-store and online purchasing originated through the mall’s retailer websites, and in a manner that works for the retailer. This “hub” distribution system can be applied to a single mall or to a regional consortium of A, B and C malls utilizing regional storage in a central C mall with one same-day delivery provider, to which end we are engaged with Deliv’s CEO and founder, Daphne Carmeli, whose firm has established relationships with GGP, Macerich and Westfield.

We are developing a digital omnichannel platform that can be utilized by a mall’s marketing staff to facilitate better utilization of the mall’s website and other media/social media tools to provide interactive shopping channels between the shopper and the retailer. One objective is to make the mall’s website a primary portal for the shopper to be introduced to the mall’s retailers’ websites and promotional offerings, as well as facilitating shopper election of in-store pickup or same day delivery of web purchases (as well as returns). MB has formed an alliance with an ecommerce platform that is shop-and retailer interfacing. Mall shoppers can browse, curate, share and purchase – retailers can plug in their offers (item and price/promotion) – and mall personnel can place selected store offers, seasonal groupings or targeted store groups into the platform to drive category shopping and shopper segment engagement. Today’s typical mall website functions simply as a directory of malls stores and mall operating hours and is viewed by the shopper as perfunctory. The Sydewalk platform will transform the mall website – and by extension, mobile apps – into a channel for the mall customer to source real time deals and “window shop” mall retailers and their respective website goods offerings. A mall website augmented by Sydewalk closes the loop by providing the shopper with procurement elections – pick up or delivery - to complete a purchase.

These channels will drive sales productivity, enhance customer loyalty to the mall and retailer plus generate back-end analytics that will, in turn, allow mall stores to develop more targeted offerings to various demographic and mindset shopper segments. David Lobaugh of August Partners and Bruce Maguire of Sydewalk LLC lead this initiative.
